Course details

Programme Highlight

Active fire protection systems for fire extinguishing, detection and smoke management are important systems provided for buildings to reduce the occupant fatalities and damages in the event of fire. Over the last decade, new technologies and products of the active fire protection systems have been developed for today's complex, mega and multipurpose building designs in Hong Kong. This training course is purposed to be offered to the building professionals and engineers (especially for young engineers) to deliver a better understanding and practical knowledge of the active fire protection systems. The content of these courses cover the areas of the fire engineering related codes of practices and regulations of which the theories, principles, applications and common mistakes in design and statutory submission will be discussed in the training courses. Case studies will also be included to provide examples on the applications of the active fire protection systems.

1st lecture : Hydrant, sprinkler, long-throw-sprinkler, drencher, water mist system
2nd lecture : Automatic fire alarm systems, advance fire detectors, intelligent systems, emergency lighting system and exit signs
3rd lecture : Staircase pressurization system, dynamic smoke extraction system, VAC control.
4th lecture : Foam expansion systems, total gas flooding systems.

Speaker : FSD's officer, academics, fire engineering consultants, suppliers/manufacturers
(details will be announced later)
